The APSIN Redesign Project

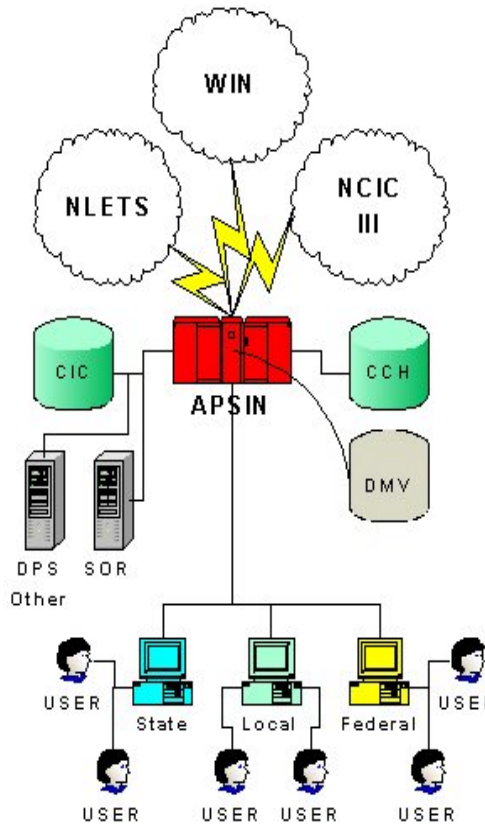

The Alaska Department of Public Safety (DPS) has undertaken a project to redesign and rebuild the Alaska Public Safety Information Network (APSIN).

APSIN replaced the Alaska Justice Information System (AJIS) as the criminal justice information system for Alaska in 1984.

Over the years of its existence, APSIN has done an exceptional job of delivering critical information to law enforcement and other criminal justice agencies around the state.

APSIN has served as the means by which agencies have been able to:

- ★ Share information
- ★ Access NLETS, NCIC, III and other information sources outside of Alaska
- ★ Access criminal histories, driving histories, stolen vehicle and property information
- ★ Access sex offender and concealed handgun permit information
- ★ Access many other functions essential to preserving the safety of our citizens.

The APSIN workhorse:

- ☞ Over 10,000 queries a day
- ☞ Over 1,622,000 person records
- ☞ Nearly 514,000 criminal history records
- ☞ More than 16,000 concealed handgun permits
- ☞ More than 4160 sex offenders
- ☞ Nearly 4200 persons reported missing each year
- ☞ Nearly 1150 active domestic violence protective orders

The original APSIN design has proven to have been ahead of its time and has been emulated by other criminal justice information systems over the years.

New and better computing and networking technologies have emerged while at the same time state and federal requirements for APSIN have overtaken the ability of the existing legacy system to keep up.

As a result, over the next 5 years or so, a new system will be designed and built using modern, open architecture technologies.

The new system will be brought online in parallel with APSIN as each of its functions are thoroughly tested and proven to function under real world use.

It is the goal of DPS to deliver a criminal justice information system that is second to none and can serve Alaska's need far into the future and do it better than ever before.
